Role-play

You are on holiday staying at a small hotel in Looe. You complain to the receptionist about the noise in the street during the night and that your cooked breakfast was not hot enough. You then ask for suggestions about what to do on such a wet day. The receptionist says you could catch the train to Truro – lots of nice shops there. You ask how long the journey would take and the answer is about an hour and a half. What! You must be joking! is your reply. You say you spent five and a half hours in the car yesterday with traffic jam after traffic jam and believe it or not there are lots of nice shops where you come from in London! You suppose you could wander round the little tourist shops in Looe and try to find a pub that does a decent lunch if that is possible. The receptionist wishes you good luck and you wander off moaning under your breath about poor service, awful food and terrible weather and wonder why you decided to come to Cornwall in the first place!

A suggested conversation is not given at this level.
